Law In Action

You try to drive with care, to obey the speed laws, and to play safe. But can you recall taking some little chance, shooting a yellow light, jay walking, or not coming to a full stop when you should?

Well, if lucky these little risks will bring at most a traffic ticket. But what happens if they get you into a big crash, as they well may?

You may be guilty of "contributory negligence." Most American courts hold that to make a person who has been at fault liable for damages, the injured party must himself be free from fault.

Your negligence or carelessness must not have helped to bring on the mishap. Even though the other fellow was more at fault, it may cost you money to go through that yellow light, or fail to make a full stop, or jay walk.

California law does not try to set degrees of fault or attempt to adjust a loss between wrongdoers for accidents occurring on land. (But sea law does look into the comparative claims of two colliding ships.)

So, watch out. Keep your eyes open drive with care, obey all traffic laws.

For if the mishap really is the other fellow's fault, you don't want your own contributory negligence to deprive you of an award you may need for medical bills or property damage.

Note: California lawyers offer this column so you may know about our laws.
